Detective Reggie Brown's wife is counting down the days until his retirement. But rather than to slide out his final days, Detective Brown is confronted with the phone message of TV reporter Chad Marshall that gives the location of a dead body in a Chicago park. Thus begins a partnership, though strained, between the two as phone more messages are received and the body count grows. And the detective has a personal deadline of his retirement date as he does not want to walk away from an unsolved case. Twists and turns solve the case in a surprise. Great book.

It started out slow and easy - building to a a fast pace exciting conclusion. Very accurate account of police procedure and Chicago landmarks. But most of all - a great read!!

Good book I'm an avid reader an am on Dallas now looking forward to reading them all. Thank you for writing them
