Customer Reviews

A story from my favorite romance author that is as close as it ever comes to today's world of dating and relationships: personal ads and blind dates. Not too many of us are out there exist who havent had their own experience of this type of dating in today's world, and hence perfectly can relate to. The author wrote this in stlye where the thoughts from each of the main characters are made known to the readers at all times. I guess the plot made it impossible to narrate it from only the heroine's point of view. I personally didn't find the story very exciting, probably because I didn't want to read a romance that is too close to today's dating world. I felt I already know what they think and feel and there is no suspense, or thrill in reading as a result. To me, the only thing that is romantic about this type of plot is the happy ending, which almost never existing in personal ad dating. I love Mrs Craven's stories because most of them are written so that the reader can only feel and see what the heroine does until the end of the book where the thoughts of the hero are revealed. Some might call it monotone and not happy with her style of writing. But she's the only one i know with this writing style and it is rare and precious to me.
